German English School

The German English School was established by immigrants shortly before the Civil War in order to promote German culture among their children. The school was founded on three principles: Religious instruction was prohibited, German and English would be taught equally, and the third principle, that the first two principles must always be followed. The property was deeded to the San Antonio School Board in 1903 and served as Brackenridge Grammar School, Page Middle School and San Antonio College until 1953. The buildings were restored and served as headquarters for HemisFair in the 1960's.
